MAN ABOUT

HARRYTUCKER ?

Macacoaccaccacanteccoccaca

We are gind to observe the grass pushing itself up through the crust of this mundane sphere, for we have to go out under the shade of the trees and loli about on the soft verture.

We love to himt for four-leaf clovers, so good luck may come our way.

We love to lay back on the mossy banks and think thoughts, and sleen, and dream, and then be awakened by a voice commonding us to get off the grass.

We love to go fishing and rest away the long hours of saliry days, while the robin redbreast wags his tail at us from his perch on yonder fonce rail.

We love to stroll among the woodland and chase the little squirrel as it hous from bough to bough and shakes its busky tail like Barber Scitz shaking for drinks.

drinks.

And, then, how nice it is to gather grayes from the bushes and blackberries from the vines.

And, oh, what fun there is in making a hurried retreat from a moccasin snake. We like to wade in the brooks and sather dainty little pebbles to pait on the mantelpiece in the parlor by the side of the pretty "Remember Mo" cup and saucer!

We like the bark of the honest watch dog, as he tells his trouble to the canine on the next block.

We love the soft song of the mesquito and the chirp of the butterily as it fits from flower to flower.

And we love to think of the days of our barcoted youth, when we went out in the clover fields and stepped on the innocent bees.

on the clover fields and stepped on the innocent bees.

All these things come up before us as we see the days grow long and the ice melt away, and we feel giad.

And, then, we wonder why it is that we are destined to get up in the cold every morning about 5 and go way out in the cold on the back porch to awaken the cook, so she can go down and make a fire so we can get up in the warmth occasioned thereby, and put on our oldest sory's overcoat and go down to Berry's grocery to get some herrings and tripe for breakfast.

for breakfast,

Cvr friend George Cunningham don't knew any more about selecting turkeys than we do about buying real estate.

And we can prove it by Wiley Lawrence and Simon Perkinson.

It went over to Petersburg the other day to peddle some of the liquid refreshments he is distilling all over the State and a fellow offered to sell him a turkey at 26 cents per 1b.

"Good; that's cheap," said George. "Ginme the turk."

Ha got it, and put it in an envelope and brought it over to Lawrence's.

Perkinson said it wasn't no turkey, and Re proved it by Colonel Carter Brander and Wiley.

"How do you know it ain't ne turkey?" Ine asked.

"Lecause, did you ever hear a turkey

he asked.
"Lecause, did you ever hear a turkey crow?" they replied.
George is still unconvinced and can't see what that has to do with the case.

Another dainty little creature is Miss madeline Phillips, one of the pretty show girls in 'The Show Girl,' at the Bijou. She hasn't been in the business much over two or three weeks, but she carries herself like a veteran and looks like a ferry.

OF HUMAN INTEREST; STORIES OF THE DAY

Twelve Ahead of the Game. Twelve Ahead of the Game.

This story was told at a recent meeting of a medical society in New York according to the New York Main and Express.

A physician practicing in one of the smaller cities up the State was aroused at midnight by an inebriated individual who insisted that the man of medicine accompany him immediately to his home, three miles back in the country.

"Ser ous case, Doc," said the caller. "Mush come melty."

The physician protested that his man was absent and there was no one on the premises who was able to hitch up the horse.

the premises who was able to hitch up the horse.
"Sall right," said the insistent one.
"Til hich 'm in shifty. Showmeem."
"You understand, of course," warned the doctor, "that while my charge for a call in that district is a dollar, in the daytime, I'll have to charge you two dollars for going out there at this time of the night."

The answer the coulter lead to hitch the present of the night."

lars for going out there at this time of the night."

For answer the caller placed a two-doilar bill inglishe doctor's hand.

They went out to the barn, the stranger necked the horse up in in olme at all and they set out for the back country at a good pace. Arrived there, Sawbones asked to see the patient. The inobriated one tumbled out of the bugsy and leored at the other as he said:

"I'm ze only patien". Tell yer how 'is Doe, I went zer liv'ry stable, see! Asked in 'ryman how musheed charge take me home. 'E sez four dollars, 'n I sc's outrache. Played a Toke on a Hawk.

Played a Joke on a Hawk.

Hawks, writes the author of "Travels in a Trestop," have an unusual amount of curiosity. They are trapped, he says, almost as often through their curiosity as through their fear. Sometimes in winter, when there is little to attract their attention, an urbailed trap, if of a new shape or variety, is quite as likely to land a victim as if it held a most appetrang mouse.

Once a trick was played upon a splendid black hawk that had been mousing over the fields for half the winter. It often perched upon a straw stack, instead of in the center of the field. Early one morning a plump meadow mouse, with an inflated bladder, attached to it by a string, was placed on the top of the stack. The bladder and cord were concealed by the straw. The lawk was apparently a little suspicious when he first noticed the mouse. He was not used to secting a mouse remain perfectly still in that way, especially when he began to circle about with his great black wings close down to the stack. Presently he alighted in a warry way on one end of the stack, then he walked nearer, dyed the mouse sharply, and pecked at it. At last he seized it in his talons and made off for the hickory. Halfway there, however, he noticed the bladder attached, and gave the mouse a violent jerk to free it from the bladder appendage. This only served to make the bladder bob up and down more furiously, and with a scream of terror the hawk dropped the mouse and cill and field to the works. It was some time before he was again seen in the neighborhood of the strey.

Church Advertises on Blotters.

Church Advertises on Blotters.

Hecently the Hough Avenue Congregational Church, Cleveland, O., created comment by employing a piess agent who had been formerly employed in the same caractity by a theatre, and now the Frankflin Circle Church of Christ has inaugurated a novelty in church advertisement in the shape of a highly colored blotter.

This blotter contains an invitation to weishing at the church, a picture of which appears on the large sheet of ink absorbed to traveling men in particular.

These blotters will soon be found on the writing tables of every hotel in the city, and Rev. Edgar D. Jones and his congregation expect much from the innovition. They will be distributed by founds, who of scholars.—Walden's Statucher.
